October 2017 Wildfires Consolidated Debris Removal Program

The consolidated debris removal program designed to help survivors of the October 2017 wildfires was developed by Cal OES and FEMA to ensure clean-up occurs to common standards, accounting for worker and environmental safety, and facilitates faster rebuilding.

- Just one month into the second phase of the program, Cal Recycle, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and their contractors have removed fire debris from 1209 properties. The first phase that focused on removal of household hazardous waste also nears total completion.
- Cal Recycle is coordinating the second phase of debris removal operations in Butte, Nevada and Yuba counties and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers supports efforts in Lake, Mendocino, Napa and Sonoma counties.
- The program is on track to ensure all fire debris is safely removed by early 2018. In all counties, more than 300,000 tons of fire debris have been removed.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- North winds are expected to peak today in the Central Valley with gusts around 40 mph possible, especially in Yolo and Solano Counties.
- East winds are forecast to peak tonight and early Tuesday across the northern Sierra Nevada with gusts of 40 to 60 mph or higher possible through the passes and along the crest.
- The Santa Ana winds combined with humidity's in the teens and single digits, along with very dry fuels, will likely bring an extended period of critical fire weather conditions to much of Los Angeles and Ventura Counties. If fire ignition occurs, there is a high likelihood of rapid fire spread, long range spotting, and extreme fire behavior. Other potential impacts included downed trees and power lines, blowing dust, and power outages, especially Monday night into Tuesday.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A pattern change underway this week. A strong ridge of high pressure will develop and affect the weather for the next several days. Afternoon temperatures will warm to above normal status and little, if any rain expected during the next 7 to 10 days. Due to the persistent pattern, N to NE and even some offshore wind is expected across the North Ops region through at least mid week. Expect general gusts between 25 to 35 mph with locally between 40 to 50 mph favoring the Sacramento Valley, eastern edges of it as well as portions of the Diablo-Santa Cruz and Bay Marine areas. The flow should become lighter and a little more variable the latter half of the week and last into the weekend. The strongest winds will occur today and tonight.

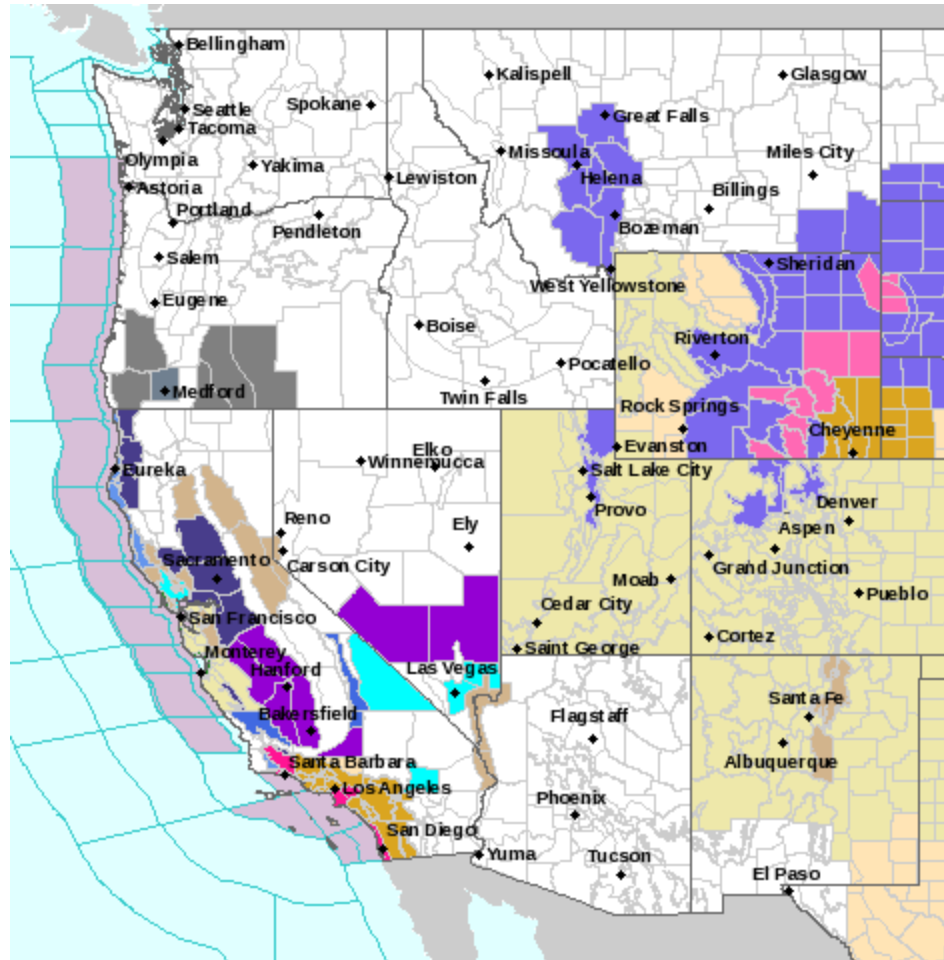

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Moderate to strong offshore winds along with very dry conditions across Southern California through Saturday morning

Strong surface high pressure over the Great Basin will bring widespread offshore winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph to much of Southern California tonight through Tuesday afternoon and again Wednesday night through Friday morning. The rest of this week will have more localized winds of 15 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across Southern California. Offshore winds over Southern California are expected to become light by Saturday afternoon. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the teens today and then drop into the single digits Tuesday through this weekend. The back side of a Pacific trough will bring near normal temperatures through Tuesday, with 40s to low 50s across the mountains and 60s to low 70s in the valleys. The area of high pressure off the West Coast will push inland bringing warmer temperatures Wednesday through this weekend. Temperatures across the valleys of Southern California will warm into the low to mid 80s Thursday through this weekend, which is 10 to 15 degrees above normal for this time of year.
